OCA14. - Characteristics of the author's contribution	100%
OCA15. - Annotation of the output with contextual information concerning the description of creative process and the content of the research/artistic/other activity, etc.	The university textbook is primarily intended for students of social work, but it is clearly usable for students studying other disciplines at universities, especially future helping professionals (curative education, special pedagogy, social pedagogy, psychology, etc.), because it deals with the concept social work in employment services, approaches the possibilities and limits of social work in the field of employment services and represents the optimal approach usable in short-term counseling. The aim of the university textbook is to bring a comprehensive view of social work in the field of employment services, as well as to contribute to knowledge of resources, processes and labor market context in the context of unemployment consequences for the most vulnerable groups in the labor market. This goal is fulfilled by the university textbook with the valuable content of its individual chapters.

OCA18. - Characteristics of the output's impact on socio-economic practice	The publication output in the form of a university textbook has the potential to influence not only domestic but also Czech socio-economic practice, because it provides a logical overview of legislation and historical labor market developments, pointing to important milestones in its development and transformation of employment services and especially its active labor market measures. These can also be an inspiration for Czech employment services and especially a specific tool such as the Individual Action Plan (IAP) in the context of professional counseling services using a short-term counseling approach (focused on tasks). The textbook is also based on research (content analysis of the IAP implemented in three regions of Slovakia), which brings valuable implications for the real practice of social work in employment services. A review in a major journal (currently in the SCOPUS database) was also prepared for the textbook in 2016. Social work: Gergel, Milan - Žilová, Anna: Ladislav Vaska: Služby zamestnanosti a vybrané aspekty sociálnej práce s nezamestnanými. In: Sociální práce/Sociálna práca, roč. 16, č. 2, 2016, s. 79-81. OCA19. - Characteristics of the output and related activities' impact on the educational process	The issue of employment services and specifically the use of the optimal approach in the context of (short-term) counseling represents a significant contribution to education in social work, not only at universities but also in further education of social workers providing employment services at UPSVaR. The textbook has an impact on the educational process in that it: a) presents the development of employment services and transformation processes since 1989; b) presents important historical milestones in the development of social work in employment services; b) presents forms, methods and techniques of social work (in employment services); (c) presents task-oriented approach; d) presents research findings and each chapter concludes with questions. In bachelor study can be beneficial for students in the field of education such as the theoretical foundations of social work, employment and labor market policy, methods and techniques of social work. In Master study information in the textbook enriches the theoretical concepts of social work (concrete approach). There is also a benefit for PhD. study - the textbook critically evaluates the development of employment policy and especially social work in employment services, which forces them to think scientifically and discuss PhD. students socio-political and theoretical concepts of social work.

OCA15. - Annotation of the output with contextual information concerning the description of creative process and the content of the research/artistic/other activity, etc.	OBJECTIVES: The paper aims 1) to conceptualize the issue of using information and communication technologies (ICT) in supervision, 2) to define the impact of the pandemic on the conducting and experience of supervision in a select group of supervisors and 3) to analyze the pros and cons of cyber supervision. THEORETICAL BASE: The authors understand supervision as an interaction process based on the communication between the supervisor and the supervisee. They focus on the specifics of virtual supervision and the related subjective experience thereof. METHODS: The qualitative research utilized a semi-structured interview with a select group of supervisors. OUTCOMES: Based on the analysis of research data, the changes brought about by the COVID-19 pandemic in supervision in social work were defined in 2 concepts: a) change in the implementation methods of supervision in the context of digitalization, and b) change in the experience of supervision by supervisors; the analysis also revealed the pros and cons of supervision in the online environment. SOCIAL WORK IMPLICATIONS: The paper responds to the current topic of "digitalization of supervision during the pandemic" and provides important knowledge and requirements related to supervision. It also outlines the issues and challenges related to the use of ICT in supervision with regard to the pros and cons of cyber-supervision from the perspective of supervisors in the Slovak context.

OCA18. - Characteristics of the output's impact on socio-economic practice	The aim of the paper/study was to conceptualize the use of ICT not only in social work supervision, but also to present the possibilities and limits of the use of ICT in social work in general. Supervision in social work is a tool for the professionalization of social work. The contribution to socio-economic practice of the present study can be seen in an international dimension, as a publicly available text can influence students, practitioners and especially professionals in the field (thanks to a thorough analysis of the digitalization of social work and supervision in recent years) to use this tool more effectively in practice (both scientific and practical) and thus increase the quality of social work education, the quality of social work services and also social work science - even in countries where the level of supervision and social work is limited. This raises awareness and improves services for people (which also results in lower financial costs for the state) who are in challenging life situations and prevents burnout syndrome, supervision serves as psycho-hygiene, thus also contributing to the mental health of helping professionals and at the same time preventing harm to the social work client (e.g. ethical dimensions of online supervision and various dilemmas).
OCA19. - Characteristics of the output and related activities' impact on the educational process	The results presented in the study enrich the theoretical platform of social work and offer answers to questions and uncertainties that arise in relation to the transformations of supervision in social work, especially in the context of its digitalization. Knowing all the (modern) contexts of supervision, which is an immanent part of the development of social work, is an important aspect in the undergraduate training of social workers. The study is research-based and applicable in the courses: Theoretical Aspects of Social Work, Forms and Methods of Social Work, Supervised Professional Practice (Bachelor's Degree); Theories of Social Work, Supervision in Social Work, Current Trends in Social Work and Supervised Professional Practice (Master's degree) also in the doctoral studies in the subjects Theoretical Concepts of Social Work and to some extent in the subject Action and Evaluation Research in Social Work due to the fact that it is a research study (qualitative strategy) and can be an inspiration for doctoral students and their research tasks and publications in foreign language in indexed journals.

THEORETICAL BASE: The formation of supervision is rooted specifically in the period of aid institutionalization. The process of social work professionalization built the profession on a solid base and has become a supporting pillar of supervision. METHODS: The paper is designed as historical research using content analysis of historical texts. OUTCOMES: The history of supervision dates back to the beginnings of charitable organizations. The history of supervision in social work shows that supervision has developed alongside the social work profession. Supervision between the 19th and the beginning of the 20th century was characterized by administrative and educational function, followed by supportive function. The authors found that in the examined period there was no differentiation between student supervision and supervision for social workers. SOCIAL WORK IMPLICATIONS: The results presented herein enrich the social work historical platform and offer answers to questions arising in connection with the history of supervision in social work.

OCA18. - Characteristics of the output's impact on socio-economic practice	The aim of the paper / study was to identify, on the basis of a historical analysis, the origins and nature of supervision in social work and its gradual development in the context of the professionalization of social work. The historical formation of supervision is rooted directly in the history of social work, specifically in the period of institutionalization of aid. The process of professionalization of social work has not only built the profession on a solid footing, but has also become a mainstay of supervision as an immanent part of it. The contribution to the socio-economic practice of this study can be perceived mainly on an international scale, as publicly available text can influence students, practitioners and especially experts in this field (thanks to thorough knowledge of supervisory developments) to use this tool more effectively in practice (both scientific and practical).) and thus increase the quality of education in social work, the quality of provided social work services and also the science of social work. This raises awareness and services for people who are in a difficult life situation and prevents burnout, serves as a psychohygiene, which also contributes to the mental health of helping professionals.

The authors bring research findings on a specific form of supervision in social work, creating a unique theoretical and research publication. The authors have succeeded in gathering important information for the gradual and inevitable piecing together of the mosaic of supervision in its research contexts. The aim of the research monograph is to expand the scientific (theoretical-research) platform with knowledge about organization supervision and models of organization supervision and thus to create a coherent concept of organization supervision. Based on the identified research findings, the aim was also to develop models of organization supervision that are realistically used in supervision practice, and then to conceptualize these findings for the field of supervision in social work. In the research, based on the analysis of individual experiences and perspectives of supervisors, 4 models of organization supervision were identified and created: 1) Organization supervision oriented to assess the quality of services; 1) Organization supervision as an accompaniment in the process of change; 3) Organization supervision focused on the identified problem in the organization; 4) Organization supervision as an assisting method in the development of the organization.

OCA18. - Characteristics of the output's impact on socio-economic practice

This scholarly monograph of a research nature brings the concept of organizational supervision into research reflection and enriches both the theory and practice of supervision in social work and, secondarily (but very significantly), the practice of social work. In fact, it represents (in the organizational context) an important source of professional support for social work practitioners, which helps not only professional development of competencies, verification of the correctness of procedures, search for alternatives, but also protection of the helping professional against burnout syndrome, maintaining and increasing the status of the profession, to protect the client from harm or even abuse, and at the same time to more effective performance of an inclusive and modern social work practice. Supervision must respect and respond in a timely manner to the Slovak reality of social work practice, but also to the constantly changing socio-political context, which is also reflected in the research report. At the same time, the publication has a significant potential to influence primarily the practical level of social work practice and also secondarily its socio-political context. The current Slovak practice in the field of supervision with a focus (not only) on the organisation (as a whole) is not sufficiently research mapped. The publication provides information that sheds light on this area, but last but not least, it has the potential to influence and positively change the practice of social work at different levels and to enrich the scientific sphere with new theoretical concepts. The monograph currently has a total of 3 reviews (1 of which is indexed in the SCOPUS database).

OCA19. - Characteristics of the output and related activities' impact on the educational process	The elaborated issue of organization supervision taking into account the reality of current trends (empowerment, multidisciplinary, human-legal, ethical aspects, etc.) has a direct impact on the educational process in that, on the one hand, it presents the real state and progress of supervision in the field of social work with a focus on the organization as a whole (in which various forms of supervision are implemented) and, on the other hand, it points to the reserves in the provision of supervision in its procedural, content and relational dimensions in organizations providing social work services. Thus, the scientific monograph of a research character opens a space for the development of the field of education social workers and, thanks to the organizational context, also for the improvement of the quality of practical education at universities (and practice workplaces) and in the field of adaptation of new employees in the social sphere. At the same time, the monograph can be inspiring not only for the teaching of Supervised Professional Practice (in 1st and 2nd level), but also for the teaching of social work practice: Research in SW and its content can also be used in the subjects Social and Political Contexts of SW, Participative Management and Design in SW and clearly in the profile subject Supervision in SP. It will also find its relevance in doctoral studies, when it can be an inspiration in the development of a research plan, a dissertation project and the implementation of research.

OCA15. - Annotation of the output with contextual information concerning the description of creative process and the content of the research/artistic/other activity, etc.	This book presents a unique analysis of the learning derived from East-West contacts in social work and reflects on the discipline's inalienable trans-national dimensions, of high actuality in the face of the re-emergence of nationalisms. The fundamental transformations in Europe subsequent to the revolutions of 1989 had a profound impact on social work in terms of raising sharply the profession's relationship with politics. The exchanges between western schools of social work and the emergent academic partner institutions in former Communist countries formed a valuable testing ground for the essential principles and competences of social work in terms of their universal scientific basis on the one hand and their regard for cultural and national values and contexts on the other. The chapters in this contributed volume focus on lessons derived from fundamental social and political transformations, highlighted by East-West encounters and intra-national divisions, and thereby have important messages for mastering impending transformations in the light of the global COVID-19 health crisis. They demonstrate how cultural and social divisions can be addressed constructively with direct implications for training and practice in dramatically changing contexts.
